Addis Ababa is one of the fastest growing cities in Africa, but there are significant numbers of people being left behind. Women’s culturally defined roles limit their opportunities and pathways out of poverty and young people are hindered by an urban youth population that is growing faster than job creation. Existing market systems disadvantage or exclude poor women and youth from accessing wage and self-employment opportunities. The result is sustained high levels of poverty and disgruntled youth, which fuels social instability.

The Livelihoods Improvement for Women and Youth programme aims to contribute to sustainable poverty reduction and social stability in Addis Ababa by increasing incomes through improved wage and self-employment opportunities, primarily for poor women and youth.

OUR APPROACH

Our approach starts with identifying the root causes of market failure that disadvantage or exclude poor women and youth from wage and self-employment opportunities. We take time to understand business and government capabilities, individuals’ attitudes, economic and social relationships, power relations and institutions, and the rules and social norms that influence behaviour. We identify private companies and public institutions with the incentive and ability to deliver change.

Working in partnership with public and private actors, we catalyse innovative market-based solutions that have the potential to impact large numbers of poor women and youth. Our aim is to make market systems work better for our target group, while demonstrating benefit to public and private actors that play a role in the systems to ensure local ownership and sustainability and continued improvement beyond the programme period.

Our approach involves experimentation and learning rapidly from failures and amplifying successes. We share lessons learned and best practices to encourage involvement of other market actors to scale solutions and develop new innovations to maximise impact for the target group.
